Abstract

The Vowel Deletion in the Holy Quran and its Recitations: A Study of the Deletion of Case Marks

The vowel deletion represents a remarkable phenomenon worthy of study in Arabic, especially in the Quranic text. The present study sheds light on the vowel deletion in the Holy Quran where it tackles the two kinds of case marks deletion: inflectional and non-inflectional "constructive".

The present study consists of an introduction and three parts. The first part discusses the deletion of inflectional marks in the Holy Quran in isolation from the effect of the jussive factor. In addition, it unfolds linguists opinions and the suggestions they pointed out about this phenomenon. The second part discusses the deletion of non-inflectional marks" constructive" in an attempt to unfold the reasons and justifications of this deletion in its different and multiple positions. As for the third part, it points out the effect of case mark deletion upon the change of syllable formation in word structure. The study concludes with an abstract outlining the steps of the study as well as the observation and approaches given about it.
